I knew that she was a fan of Bollywood, as her name card had a fanlike lettering on it. But still, the language she was using on my ears was making a shocker. What was the language? It was Urdu. I could not see any Urdu on the outside of my tiffin box. There were many such instances in 2017 where I had to sit next to people having Urdu phrases on their name cards. First of all, they were family members of Indian filmmakers. Secondly, these people were teachers and their habits in classes were different. They did not use Bollywood dialogues in English. In short, Urdu is no longer an endangered language. Today it's the first language of many Indian households. In the US, it's even spoken in some parts of New York state and Illinois. Kolkata, January 2017. Take off the Kolkata smog and view the city in its real colours. Here, when you walk down the streets, you will come across many Muria women, dressed in the traditional Indian attire, carrying trays on their heads. Numerous migrant labourers gather in the streets of Kolkata, in East Bengal, to ask for the road passes. After a couple of months, they have started leaving the city as they cannot find jobs. There are more than 20 lakh migrant labourers in Kolkata, not including those of other parts of West Bengal. Bollywood movies play a vital role in such cultural and social preservation. Songs like “Amar khud choan kar boley mera” from Mujhe Jeene Do, “Do usko haalat karo” from Taal, “Pyaar toh kya kehta hai” from Zindagi, “Bol ye pyaar le jaungi” from Barsaat, ◆ 2d92ce491b
